

ELMS FARM (Leicestershire)

SK 631 064

Elms Farm lies near Humberstone, Leicester on a small hill over boulder clay (Charles et al. 2000, 111). Oxford Archaeological Unit began excavations in 1997 and lasted until 1998 in advance of housing development (Charles et al. 2000, 113, 115). The excavations showed activity at the site during the Bronze Age and through the Iron Age (Charles et al. 2000, 120). Furthermore, the archaeological investigations revealed a small settlement, possibly a farmstead, whose inhabitants practiced mixed farming and metalworking (Charles et al. 2000, 156, 168). Six human remains occurrences are from Elms Farm consisting of five disarticulated bones and one cremation (Boyle 2000). Angela Boyle (2000b) conducted the osteological analysis.

- The excavations did not define the entire site so there is not site location information for archaeological features.
