Note: in most instances the values for the varying results for each category are taken to five or more decimal places. This is done in order to allow an observation of the results as they were identified, and ease statistical comparisons. It should by no means be taken to indicate any implied level of accuracy in the measurements or results beyond what they clearly represent, that is the mean average for each category. Indeed, they could just as readily be taken to indicate the levels of inaccuracy involved in any such statistical comparison.
