

HUTCHINSON (Cambridgeshire)

TL 4625 5535

Hutchinson lies within Cambridgeshire on the Cambridge downlands that overlays sandy and grey clay beds (Evans et al. 2008). Cambridge Archaeological Unit carried out excavations at the site between 2002 and 2003 in advance of construction at Addenbrooke's Hospital (Evans et al. 2008, 3). The excavations revealed evidence of human activity from the Neolithic into the medieval period with particularly large amount of settlement evidence from the early Roman period (Evans et al. 2008, 27, 40). Excavations showed settlement activity also in the Late Bronze Age although much of it was destroyed by the later early Roman settlement (Evans et al. 2008, 28). However, the archaeological evidence indicated the presence of a Late Bronze Age open settlement where the inhabitants practiced a mixed farming regime (Evans et al. 2008, 28-30, 125). Furthermore, the investigations unearthed a single cremation burial that dates to the Late Bronze Age and is the only human remains from this period. Natasha Dodwell conducted the osteological analysis.