

Contents

Part 1: Background and context	1
1) Introduction	1
1.1) The structure of the work	2
1.2) Method: discipline rather than interdisciplinary approaches	2
1.3) Delimitation: what are “Viking Age amulets”?	5
Typological delimitation: amulets as miniatures and (pendant) jewellery	5
A problematisation of the term “amulet”	7
Dubious amulets	8
Chronological delimitation	10
Geographical and cultural delimitation	11
1.4) A preliminary description of the body of Viking Age amulets	11
1.5) Some conventions	12
Part 2: Theory	13
2.1) A theoretical approach to symbolism: post-structuralist semiotics	13
Symbolic objects, symbolic actions	14
“Ritual” without “religion”	16
A methodological approach to archaeology as a source for religion	16
Summary: amulets as source for the Viking Age world of ideas	16
2.2) Epistemology: scientific institutions and “the archaeological archive”	17
Find-histories as examples of epistemology	18
Regions and periods as discursive institutions in epistemology	22
2.3) Archaeology, written sources and interdisciplinarity	24
Emic and etic, and John Moreland’s model for understanding of the past in the present	25
“Always already known narratives” and the written sources	26
2.4) Summary	29
Part 3: The individual pieces: type-based analyses	30
3.1) Masks	30
3.2) Human figurines	32
“Valkyries” and women’s figurines	32
Men’s figurines	34
Legs	35
Human figurines as group	36
3.3) Animal figurines	37
Snake figurines	37
Other animal figurines	39
Summary on snakes and other animal figurines	42
3.4) Miniature weapons	42
Miniature weapons: axes	43
Miniature weapons: spears and swords	45
Miniature weapons: shields	49
Miniature weapons as whole	51
3.5) Miniature tools	52
Miniature tools: sickles and scythes	52
Miniature tools: strike-a-lights	54
Miniature tools (?): Staff-rings	56
Summary on miniature tools	58
3.6) Chairs	58
3.7) Miniature wheels	63
3.8) Bowls, sieves and spoons	63
3.9) Thor’s hammers and Thor’s hammer rings	65
3.10) Crosses	74

3.11) Supposed ambiguous Thor's hammers and crosses	75
3.12) Capsules and "scare-men"	76
3.13) Anchors	78
3.14) Lunulae	80
3.15) Summary	80
Part 4: The individual pieces: material-based analyses	85
4.1) Materials in the Viking Age frame of reference	85
4.2) Post-depositional factors for materials	85
4.3) Craftsmanship and materials	85
4.4) Specific materials	86
4.5) Gold	87
4.6) Silver	87
4.7) Bronze and copper-alloys	88
4.8) Iron	89
4.9) Lead – and tin?	90
4.10) Amber and jet	91
4.11) Other materials?	92
4.12) Summary on materials	93
4.13) Summary and chapter conclusion	93
Part 5: The amulets in find-contexts: graves, hoards, settlements and stray finds	94
5.1) General circumstances	94
National differences	95
The empiric format in the next sections	95
5.2) Graves and amulets in graves	98
Conditions of finding and reporting	98
Viking Age graves, general discussion	100
Viking Age grave goods, general discussion	102
Amulets in Viking Age graves, specific observations	103
Amulets in Viking Age graves, other specific observations	106
The age and sex of the dead	106
The placing of the amulets in the inhumations	108
Section conclusion	109
5.3) Hoards and amulets in hoards	111
Conditions of finding and reporting	111
The economical aspects of the Viking Age silver hoards	112
"Odin's law" and the interpretation of the silver hoards as offerings	113
Summary of the discussion of the Viking Age hoards	114
Interpretations of amulets in Viking Age hoards	114
Amulets in Viking Age hoards, specific observations	116
Section conclusion	117
5.4) Settlements and amulets on settlements	118
Conditions of recovery and reporting	118
Viking Age settlements as specific frame of reference	120
Amulets on Viking Age settlements - general discussion	121
Amulets on Viking Age settlements, specific observations	121
The Tissø settlement on Kalmergården and Fugledegård	123
Adelsö	124
Borg in Östergötland	124
Helgö	126
Pollista	129
Comparison of the material from Tissø, Hedeby, Helgö and Birka	130
Section conclusion	130
5.5) Stray finds and amulets as stray finds	132

Conditions of finding and reporting	132
Viking Age stray finds as specific frame of reference	133
Amulets in Viking Age stray finds, general empirical section	133
Section conclusion	133
5.6) Finds from all contexts, summary	136
5.7) Chapter conclusion on contextual analyses	136
 Part 6: The amulets in find-contexts: amulet-combinations	 139
6.1) Combinations in general	139
6.2) Combinations in graves	141
6.3) Combinations in hoards	141
6.4) Combinations on settlements	144
6.5) Amulet sets and combinations in stray finds	145
6.6) Chapter conclusion on combinations	146
 Part 7: General patterns: geographical variation	 147
7.1) Background	147
7.2) Empirical aspects	147
Sweden	148
Skåne (Scania)	148
Uppland	149
Södermanland	150
Gotland	151
Öland	152
Sweden as a whole	153
Denmark	154
Norway	155
Germany (mostly Hedeby)	156
England	157
The total material	158
7.3) Summary and chapter conclusion	159
 Part 8: General patterns: social variation	 160
8.1) Mounds and wetlands: making places, reusing spaces	160
Amulets in Viking Age space – empirical section	161
Section conclusion: amulets in space	163
8.2) Amulets in economy: production and consumption, craftspeople and their customers	163
Economy and the social organisation of crafts	164
Unique pieces and mass production, master pieces and standard commodities	165
Summary and section conclusion on economy	167
8.3) The craft in masks and anchors	167
8.4) Snake amulets in social and mythological context: an example of contextualisation	172
8.5) Amulets between subjects and objects	173
8.6) Repton 511 and the amulets as prosthetics	175
8.7) Amulets and identity	177
Amulets and class identity/status	177
Amulets and ethnic identity, and Wobst's theory of material symbols	178
Amulets and gender, and Butler's theory of performativity	180
Combining the three axes	181
Amulets and identity, summary	183
8.8) Chapter conclusion: amulets in context	183
 Part 9: Summary and conclusion	 184
Postscript: two new finds	189
Bibliography	190