

SERIES EDITORS

William Caraher (University of North Dakota)

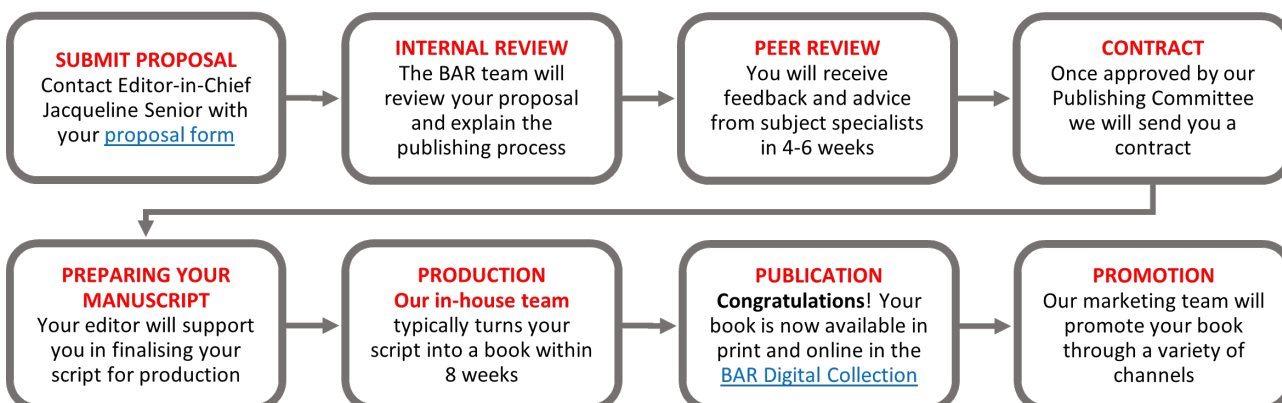

Rachel Kiddey (University of Cambridge)

This series embraces all forms of theory in contemporary and historical archaeologies, and particularly those which increase our understanding of modern values of equality, human rights, and social justice. Archaeologists have long sought to bring their expertise to the landscapes and material culture of the recent past and, since 2003, the annual Contemporary and Historical Archaeological Theory (CHAT) conference has provided a home for such studies. Contributions to CHAT have been diverse in terms of fieldwork locations and methodological approaches, but have consistently and necessarily sought to address the political climate in which they are practised.

The BAR Contemporary and Historical Archaeology series publishes theoretically driven excavation reports and object studies, conference proceedings and revised doctoral theses. We are happy to cater to a variety of publishing models, including Open Access and no cost options. Manuscripts from those originating from and working outside the regions of North/West Europe and North America are particularly welcomed. We will publish in English, French, German, Italian and Spanish.

Editorial Board

In forming our Editorial Board, we have brought together a diverse panel of international experts with wide-ranging interests across all areas of contemporary and historical archaeology. Their combined expertise includes (de)colonial and indigenous archaeologies, heritage management, gender, forensic osteology, industrial archaeology, archaeological theory and public archaeology.
