Edward Biddulph (Oxford Archaeology)
Martin Pitts (University of Exeter)

Roman Britain presents a dynamic and exciting field of study, with an abundance of data amenable to multi-disciplinary approaches, 'big data' studies, the application of theoretical approaches, and a variety of visually stimulating artefacts and reconstructions that speak to our own age in a remarkably direct way. The demand for information is constant, yet accessing quality analyses and robust data remains challenging. This peer-reviewed sub-series offers a solution. The Archaeology of Roman Britain series will consider submissions for publication relating to the Roman province of Britannia, spanning a broad period from the late Iron Age through to post-Roman Britain (roughly from the 1st century BC to the 5th century AD), and also encompassing studies that examine the interaction between the British Isles, the nearby Continent, and other parts of the connected Roman empire. Reports, revised doctoral theses, synthetic studies and data analyses are welcome, including research relating to, fieldwork results, material culture, environmental studies, landscapes, numismatics, epigraphy, and historical matter. Books will be published in print and digital format, and in Open Access on request.
